Rosie Ellis

Architectural Assistant

Rosie is an architectural assistant, with an architectural degree from Kingston University.

At university, Rosie developed an interest in historical architecture and how ancient places can be best enjoyed, utilised and preserved. Her curiosity in this type of architecture was nurtured through interesting university projects including designing within or close to World Heritage sites, and designing a Thermal Baths Visitor Centre within the grounds of Herculaneum in Naples.

Currently, Rosie is working on Reading School for David Morley Architects. She is trained in tap and modern dance and enjoys baking, cooking and sewing in her free time.
